Vice Chancellor for University Affairs and Student Athletics David Williams II

"We believe in a well-rounded experience for our student-athletes that includes academics, athletics, community involvement, and a college social life. It will make them better in all areas. At Vanderbilt, while we strive to win, we define winning very broadly."

UNIVERSITY

Vanderbilt is a national leader in graduation rates among its student-athlete population. In 2006, Vanderbilt tied for third nationally. In 1997 and 2007, the Vanderbilt football program topped all NCAA members.

For nearly two decades, the College Football Coaches Association has recognized Vanderbilt for graduating at least 70 percent of its players.

Vanderbilt student-athletes are supported by an eight-person professional staff of advisors and counselors directed by Elizabeth Wright in the Stratton-Foster Academic Center, located in McGugin Center. The recently expanded facility contains tutorial rooms, a computer lab, quiet reading zones, and private study areas.

Campus Facts

Our 300-acre campus was designated a national arboretum in 1988. Pre-game walks through the original campus or around neighboring Peabody College are among the South's most scenic campus strolls.

Well-Rounded Student-Athletes

Through an array of programs coordinated by the CHAMPS/Life Skills office, many Commodore athletes find ways to reach out to the local community. The activities include tutoring and mentoring disadvantaged youngsters at local schools and community centers, encouraging young patients at the Monroe Carell Jr. Children's Hospital on campus, participating in renovation work in the area, and hosting a holiday party for neighboring elementary school students.
